ID. After the trial, the jury returned a verdict that does not consider negligence on the part of the defendant. ID. At 969. Accordingly, the plaintiff challenged the claim of wrong testing Court improperly allowing the defendant to call into question the credibility of the mother (who was a witness) using its expelled convictions of crimes related to drugs. The final question this court had to answer was whether it was a mistake for the court to allow the defendant to use his mother's exploded beliefs of drug-related crimes in order to challenge his credibility as a witness. ID. to 976. The purpose of the accused in the use of the The drug-related crimes had to involve the mother using medications at the time of pregnancy and this is what caused the complainant's problems. ID. 978. In reviewing the issue, the Court referred to a Kansas case which stated that the courts have inherent powers over their official records. ID. In addition, the Court noted that in an unusual case, where a defendant, whose previous criminal convictions had been expelled, was directly involved in the civil litigation, a district court in its power will allow the release of certain documents contained in a file expounded in order to acquire the ends of justice. ID. However, in this case, the Court noted that it was errors to admit the exploded beliefs (unlike some documents in the explained record). ID. In summary, the Court concluded that, in a normal case, a court could release certain documents from a record expounded in a civil court or in a case. ID. However, it would be a mistake to release the exploded beliefs in a court of law or civil lawsuit. ID. ID.
